“If I cannot do great things, I can do small things in a great way.” This quote was made by the remarkably influential Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Dr. King was one of our biggest support systems for equality in America and still is to this day. He said this quote during the Civil Rights Movement and it has been very influential to many out in the world, me included. This quote has observed how we do not all need to do huge tremendous actions to change the world we can simply do small things in a great way as he says to change the world. Just as Dr. King has shown us, he did not immediately change everyone’s opinions but he made small actions in a great way to change individuals minds and opinions little by little.

Little by little we can change things and little by little we can show up. We can show up for ourselves and we can show up for others to support what is right for humanity. We can and must honor Dr. King by using this quote as a mindset for our lives. We need to remember we cannot all be famous and popular by doing great big things, but we can be selfless and benevolent by doing small things in a great way. Dr. King changed how America is for us today and this quote really demonstrates how he did it, little by little. He fought, and he lost some, but in the end he changed America’s state of mind and brought up acceptance to our country. This concept of doing things little by little can really be used in almost all parts of our lives and can affect the way we view things.

We cannot change things immediately; for example, we can’t change who our president is immediately. Instead, little by little, we vote and knock out candidates to find who is going to be our new president. The way we execute tasks can really change the outcome of it. This quote really helps to represent that if we rush into something and try to mend it all at once it will not work. However, if we try doing things little by little the outcome will most likely turn out better. Dr. King has represented what it means to do these actions. This quote is a huge inspiration to me and it should be to many others, too.
